I explain letter anatomy in-depth in my hand lettering quick start guide, but I'll give you the quick and dirty version here. If you're not careful and the two are too close, they can throw off the whole bounce of a word. This gives extra bounce to your letters, which can help you get a more playful effect. Choose a weekly or monthly time sheet and check out the personal timesheet in a variety of customized colors. The Descender Line: Letters like g, y, j, and p have an extra line that falls below the baseline, and this line is called a descender. Each course comes with in-depth lessons and step-by-step projects to help grow your skills one video at a time and make incredible journal pages. Letter on a Line Draw a line (or use the lines on a page) and use it as a center point in your word. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET You'll also get access to personalized professional feedback on your projects to help you boost your confidence and make progress toward your creative goals. If you have too many letters dip low and not enough above to balance it out, the whole thing can look a bit off. However, one thing you can pay attention to while you're lettering is the balance of the word. Change the placeholder information on the sheet to your company name, address, phone and fax number, and add your employee information easily. Try using a bullet tip or felt tip pen instead of a brush pen to practice bounce lettering. This also allows you a little more leeway to connect cursive letters to each other. Just make sure to have a clear bounce between the pair and you should be fine! Grab My Free Bounce Lettering Practice Sheet Want a bit of extra guidance while you practice your own lettering? When you are learning lettering, one of the first things you need to master is basic letter anatomy. The Ascender Line: Letters like l, t, h, f, and d have an extra arm that rises higher than the X-height. Instead, you add some variation to the position of the letters, giving them the appearance of bouncing. 6 Tips for Practicing The best way to learn bounce lettering is to practice it again and again. It takes quite a bit of time and practice to create bounce lettering that looks fluid and effortless. You don't need any particular pens or makers to do this method — it works with whatever tools you have. Just log on to the BetterTeam website and download all of the time sheet files. Go Dramatic with Shapes Let your letters have a little dramatic flair! Bounce lettering is a great time to let loose with your style. The Baseline: This is where the bottom of all letters sit on a line, providing a base for all the other parts of a letter. Essentially, there are four parts of a letter that you need to know. Bouncy fonts buck the idea of keeping all the letters on a single baseline. Check out these printable time sheets, organize your activities and spend less time worried about missing a deadline. Use Your Own Software to Create a Custom Sheet From a TemplateMicrosoft Word and Excel both offer awesome options for creating blank time sheets that are then customized to suit your life. In this post, I'll show you everything you need to know to conquer bounce lettering and add this exciting style to your creative toolkit. If you have a few letters bouncing high, try to make sure the next few strokes go low to balance it out. Don't Worry About Weight If you're new to brush lettering, you might be tempted to try to bounce lettering with a brush pen. Over the past few years, bounce lettering has popped up everywhere in the design world — blogs, advertisements, product packaging, and home decor... just to name a few! This lettering style looks fun and full of life, so it's no wonder that creatives everywhere are clamoring to learn this method. It's no wonder that bounce lettering has become a beloved style in the hand lettering and design community! How to Do Bounce Lettering While the style might be fun and easy-going, it can difficult to master. Already a member of the Fox Den? The X-Height: This is the top point of the main body of a letter. The trick is to pay attention while you are lettering and try to immediately counterbalance the last two letters. It's harder to practice when you're keeping it subtle. Generally, all the letters are still roughly the same size — the X-height of all the letters should be approximately the same, even if they don't sit on the same line. Have the first of the two letters start a bit high, then slot the second letter in below. All the letters in a word should have the same X-height for a clean and consistent look. Check out the Daily Timesheet Template for keeping employees on track even when they work weekend hours, or download the Project Timesheet for freelance projects that require tracking of billable hours. The "important daily tasks" section allows for listing of all of the items that require attention today, while the time management systems provide a variety of time sheet styles for all of your workday activities. With a bit of practice, you will develop an eye for balance and figure out what works best. When a letter begins with an upstroke or ascender, try letting it really jump up high. Break the Rules Now that you understand how letters are supposed to sit on a clean, straight line, you can learn how to break those rules. Use Excel to make your own estimate sheet for upcoming work weeks, or simply design a printable time sheet right in Microsoft Word. These lines, or ascenders, reach to the top line, called the ascender line. The Anatomy of Letters To achieve bounce lettering, you need to break a few lettering rules. Try to Achieve Balance There isn't a specific right or wrong way to achieve bounce lettering. That being said, it is worth every bit of effort to learn this trendy and useful lettering method. Well, it's really all in the name! Bounce lettering is a style of lettering where you buck the norm of writing in a straight line. If you were to draw a line right through the middle of a word, you want to make sure that there is plenty of weight above and below that line. Look for blank time sheets and print them onto an adhesive sheet of paper for stick-up time sheets that you make right at home or in the office. In order to break those rules, you need to know and understand them well. What is Bounce Lettering? The descenders reach to the descender line. Download time sheets in PDF files to keep a log of your hours worked throughout the year. The BetterTeam Timesheet Template Available in Word or a PDF style, the BetterTeam time sheet template is a great choice for anyone seeking simple printable time sheets that require very little editing to work for most situations. Really let your letters bounce around so you can play with the shapes and balance of the word. I find that the easiest approach is to offset them from each other. Exaggerate the Bounce When you're learning, it helps to make big, bold bounces so you can get a feel for the style. Try new combinations of highs and lows to find a bounce that pleases you. There is no proper way to learn this method, but I have picked up a few tricks along the way that might make your journey easier. For example, you can letter an m or n with extra swooshy humps, or let the loops of ascenders and descenders get extra loopy. Offset Double Letters Double letters can be a little intimidating. These time sheets are absolutely free, and simple to customize and print. Follow the Scattered Squirrel When it comes to pretty printables, places like the Scattered Squirrel offer templates designed to be both useful and elegant. This will help you keep an eye on the balance of your lettering while you practice. If it ends with a downstroke or descender, let it dip a bit more dramatically. Instead, each letter jumps a little higher or a little lower than the baseline, creating a bouncy style. Often, this requires some improvisation in the middle of your lettering. Play around and have fun! Dip and Reach Give your letters a bit more reach for the bounce effect. While you certainly can try, you may find that it makes both practices harder. This style is whimsical, fun, and packed full of personality. Mostly, you have to feel out what looks the best to you.
